

Student Involvement

- Students are identified as important users of assessment information
- Students understand the learning targets and standards of quality
- Students have opportunities to receive and give feedback
- Assessments are designed so that students can use the results to self-assess and set goals for further action
- Students keep track of and share their achievement notes....

When students are required to think about their own learning, articulate what they understand, and what they still need to learn, achievement improves.

--Black and Wiliam, 1998